U.S. Experts Doubt a Heterosexual AIDS Epidemic

By Robert Scheer Los Angeles Times Service

ATLANTA - AIDS is not spreading at the anticipated rate among heterosexual Americans who do not use drugs, and officials at the Centers for Disease Control see no evidence that the disease will reach epidemic proportions, except among homosexuals and intravenous drug users. As a consequence, there is a growing consensus among leading medical scientists in the United States that the threat of acquired immune deficiency syndrome to the wider population, while serious, has been exaggerated.

Doctors who share this view base their conclusions on recent reviews of statistical data, which show far fewer cases among American-born beterosexuals than earlier epidemiological predictions had suggested. Moreover, according to the Centers for widely publicized instances of heterosexual transmission - such as those reported among army recruits - has found them to

Studies by the centers also show that in areas such as California and New York, where AIDS is epidemic among homosexnals and drug users, "very little crossover to the mainstream heterosexual population has occurred," said Dr. Harold W. Jaffe, the centers' chief of AIDS epidemiology.

"We don't need to panic about heterosexual transmission," said Dr. Robert C. Gallo, a National Cancer Institute researcher who was a co-discoverer of the AIDS virus. "It's not going to run ram-

AIDS remains primarily an affliction of homosexual men augmented by intraveerosexual intercourse, and all of those in-terviewed stressed the importance of safesex practices, such as using condoms. But they also believe that AIDS is not likely to reach epidemic proportions through this route because of the apparent difficulty of female-to-male transmission. Among the 40,051 AIDS cases recorded in the United States, there are only 174 males, excluding immigrants from Haiti and Africa, who have been reported to the

U.S. Gap In Trade Widens

Unexpected Rise In June Sends Dollar Tumbling

WASHINGTON - The U.S. merchandise trade deficit widened to $15.71 billion in June, largely because of a $2 billion increase in imports, the government said Friday. The figure was an apparent monthly record and stunned government officials and analysts, who had been expecting the deficit to shrink to as low as $12 billion.

The announcement sent the dollar plunging from its strengthened position of recent weeks. The U.S. currency dropped sharply against the Deutsche mark and Japanese yen before recovering somewhat in New York trading. Stock and bond prices in New York and London also fell, although they later stabi-lized after the release of heartening U.S. data on wholesale prices and industrial production, (Page 9)

The deficit would have been even larger had the Commerce Department not instituted a new method of calculating trade with Canada. The department revised trade figures for January through June to reflect undercounting of U.S. ex-ports to Canada, which had the effect of reducing the U.S. deficit in

The June deficit before the revision for undercounting was $16.32 billion. That would have surpassed the previous record monthly deficit of $16.05 billion, set in July 1986. The deficit for May under the new method was $14.04 billion, compared with $14.4 billion as originally reported.

The rune figure may well be a record, but we don't know that," said Adren Cooper, an analyst with on a different basis.

it a major setback for hopes of a long-awaited trade turnaround.
"The trade deficit was a disaster," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for Data Resources

Inc. "I still believe in the long run. we are turning around. But the silver lining is awfully hidden in this particularly dark cloud."

The Commerce Department said the June deficit was nearly 12 percent wider than that of May. For the first balf of 1987, the trade gap as running at an annual rate of $163.9 billion; by comparison, last year's revised record deficit was

BA Places £500 Million Boeing Order

By Warren Getler International Herald Tribane

LONDON - British Airways PLC said Friday it had placed a firm order for 11 Boeing 767-300 jetliners with a total value of £500 million ($789_5 million).

BA said the Boeing order includes options on 15 767-300s, a 250-seat, twin-engine jet designed for medium- to long-range use. If all the options are exercised, the 767 package would be worth more than £1.2 billion.

An option on aircraft reserves the customer a place in the manufacturer's production schedule. At the same time, BA said it had postponed to early 1988 a decision on whether to purchase long-range jets from McDonnell Douglas Co. of the United States or Airbus Industrie, the European consortium.

In addition, British Airways said it had placed firm orders for three smaller Boeing 757 jets, with a combined value of £65 million.

A year ago, BA said it had ordered 16 Boeing 747-400 jets in a transaction valued at $2.3 billion, which Boeing Co. described then as its biggest civilian order ever.

BA said the availability of Rolls-Royce PLC's RB211 engines to power the 767-300s helped clinch the deal for Boeing over a rival bid from Airbus for its A-300-600.

On the long-range jets, BA's chairman, Lord King, said Airbus had made a competitive proposal this week to sell its proposed fourengine jet, the A-340. He said British Airways would decide next year whether to buy the McDonnell Douglas MD-11 or the A-340.

U.S. Navy Learns Pitfalls Of Protecting Gulf Lanes Mined Channel Could Be Avoided

By Sailing in Iran's 'Exclusion' Area

By Bernard E. Trainor New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - As the U.S. Navy is finding out, protecting shipping in the Gulf is no easy task. Kuwaiti tankers flying the American flag entered the Gulf last month with a naval escort prepared to cope with air attacks and suicide boats, only to have one of the ships unexpectedly fall victim to an aged mine planted in a narrow shipping

The Iraqis have declared the northeastern waters of the upper Gulf a prohibited war zone, warning that they will attack all vessels in that zone above 29 degrees 30 minutes north latitude. That zone includes Kharg Island, Iran's principal oil transshipment point and the target of many Iraqi air raids.

The line that the Iranians have drawn is more ambitious. Its "exclusion zone" runs the length of the Gulf about 40 miles (65 kilometers) from the Iranian coast. The Iranians have declared these waters a war zone and they warn all shipping headed for non-Iranian ports to sail west of that line.

Unlike Libya and its claim to the Gulf of Sidra, which the United States has challenged, Iran views its exclusion zone as an interim wartime measure. Like many coastal nations, Iran claims a 12-mile limit. The United States recognizes threemile limits but normally does not challenge a 12-mile claim.

Law of the sea experts say a belligerent state may declare a "zone of danger" through which neutral vessels operate at their own peril, providing international waterways are not closed. The main shipping channel through the Gulf runs west of the Iranian exclusion zone and remains open. Gulf shipping, including the Kuwaiti tankers under American naval escort, honors the Iranian zone and stays outside it. By so doing, Iranian, is on one side of the chan- quently anchor.

It was in this narrow channel about two miles wide - that the supertanker Bridgeton hit a mine presumed to be Iranian while under U.S. Navy escort last month.

Future convoys could avoid this easily mined passage by sailing through deeper waters and a wider channel east of Farsi, but that would bring the ships into the Iranian exclusion zone. Such a move would reduce the mine threat but it would not eliminate it because randomly planted mines would still hazard

More importantly, transit of the Iranian zone could be seen as a deliberate challenge to Iran and could lead to confrontation if Tehran decided to respond with air and suicide-boat attacks against tankers and escorts.

The navy feels confident it can deal with Iranian attacks at sea even in Iranian waters, but government officials declined even to discuss crossing the Iranian exclusion line, saying that the issue was too sensitive.

Naval officers in the Pentagon said the mine threat off Farsi was a one-time surprise and the recent steps taken to improve mine countermeasures in the Gulf would soon make the idea of an alternate route

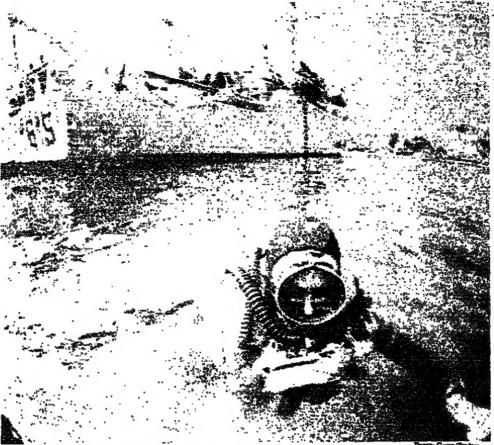

Even though Iran and Iraq have both delineated war zones in the Gulf, they bear only a loose relationship to the sites of attacks.

The Iranian exclusion line drawn to keep out foreign shipping not dealing with Iran has had the unintended effect of delineating a freefire zone for Iraqi aircraft, which attack ships they find inside the

WORLD BRIEFS

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (UP3) — Prime Minister David Lange's Labor Party faces voters in a federal election Saturday as he seeks to gain another three-year term on pledges to keep New Zealand nuclear fine and to maintain free-market economic policies.

A public opinion poll released Thursday by Radio New Zealand and the National Business Review showed the party's lead dwindling to less than 4 percent over Jim Bolger's National Party, a drop of three-

The poll predicts, however, that Mr. Lange's party will hold on to key marginal seats and win the election, but possibly with a reduced majority in Parliament. A decision on Mr. Willoch could be made in December at a scheduled meeting of alliance foreign ministers, officials said.

Expecting an attack from the south on the only road through the Tibesti Mountains, the Libyans are said to have mined the road and then defended it with cumbersome Soviet-made T-55 tanks.

But on Saturday morning, the Chadians annihilated a Libyan column about 40 miles (65 kilometers) southeast of Aozou, near Omchi, according to the account. Then the Chadians are said to have raced their Toyota light trucks through little-known mountain passes, following dry river beds.

Reagan: Stubborn, Wrong

President Reagan's promised accounting for the Iran-contra scandal came down to a minute a month. In his speech he glossed over eight months in less than eight minutes before turning the page to the rest of his term. Even now, the most he can bring himself to do before the court of public opinion is to enter a plea of nolo contendere, no contest, neither denying guilt nor affirming innocence.

Yes, Mr. Reagan said, he took responsibility. But responsibility for what? He chastised Admiral John Poindexter, the former national security adviser, for keeping the truth from him. "I had the right, the obligation, to make my own decision," Mr. Reagan said. It was left for Senator George Mitchell, a Democrat, to note that the president made the decision to exchange arms for hostages, and did it in writing. The closest Mr. Reagan came to acknowledging what he did wrong was this: "I was stubborn in my pursuit of a policy that went astray." If he still believes that, he has still not accepted the first lesson of the scandal. Stubborn? Yes. Astray? No. Giving arms for hostages to fran is not a policy that went sour in the execution. The whole idea was wrong from the start. It amounted to a supply-side hostage policy, encouraging terrorist adver-saries to kidnap some more Americans whenever they need arms, or concessions, On its face, Mr. Reagan's accounting seemed too slight and slippery, an effort too glibly to end the chapter and beat the rap. Yet the chapter is not over. The special prosecutor is still to be heard from and the congressional committees' report is coming in October. And Mr. Reagan has not beaten the rap. He is already paying a heavy price in the costly coin of public trust. If a president has public trust, everything is possible. Without it everything becomes an exertion. Mr. Reagan won't face the voters again in an election. But he faces them regularly in public opinion surveys and the results keep flashing a message in neon. A majority of the American people concluded months ago that the president had lied to them on an important issue, and nothing has shaken that conclusion. Overnight, a triumphant presidency became an uphili push.

What does Mr. Reagan propose now to push up the hill? Many Americans will welcome his expressed desire to cooperate more with Congress, his hopes for an agreement to eliminate intermediate missiles and his support for a new diplomatic initiative in Central America and "getting our fiscal house in order." But even these items are clouded by the knowledge that Mr. Reagan has been more stubborn than sensible.

The most notable example concerns the immense federal deficit. Mr. Reagan blames the congressional budget process. but it is successive Reagan administration budgets that have blown one $200 billion deficit after another through the bottom of the federal budget. And Mr. Reagan's proposed remedy, a balanced-budget amendment, is irrelevant. It sounds nice; so would an amendment guaranteeing every citizen a new BMW convertible. A balanced-budget amendment would strangle government's ability to fight recessions with deficit spending during future lean years. It is the president who insists on borrowing by the ton during the fat years. and the president who resists all the necesremedies, such as raising revenues and curtailing spending for sacred cows. The federal deficit when Mr. Reagan took office was $914 billion. Last week, it was $2.3 trillion. Yet he won't accept even the vague responsibility he now acknowledges for the Iran-contra scandal. If Mr. Reagan wants to win back the trust necessary to push his agenda to success, it will take more than vague words about diplomacy in Central America and more than evasive words blaming Congress for deficits that cast so long a shadow. Stubbornness on behalf of principle evokes admiration. Stubbornness on behalf of failed policies evokes only a sigh. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Great Stock Boom

Now commencing its sixth year, the long rise of the U.S. stock market has become one of the great booms of financial history. Stock prices have reached altitudes responsible for an epidemic of nervous indigestion among investors, as they brace themselves for the inevitable fall-back. But, high though it has climbed, the market still isn't quite as high as it was in the late 1960s. One day in December 1968, the Dow Jones Industrial Average of 30 big compa-nies' stocks closed at 985. Corrected for the massive inflation since then, that would be the equivalent of 3150 today. In fact, the average is still a little short of 2700. Perhaps the market in 1968 was a bit overpriced, but the present level does not break new ground. Stock prices are still recovering from the damage done by inflation in the 1970s.

The reasons for the present surge upward are not entirely clear, but that is not unusual in a speculative market. One important factor, new in the past five years, is certainly visible: foreign investment. Money manattractions of the U.S. economy still apparently outweigh the risks of the dollar's falling exchange rate. But it is the relationship with inflation that makes the current boom interesting. Up until 15 years ago, it was flation-proof. They represent, after all, ownership in real assets: factories, machinery, inventories. Those values ought to be constant, regardless of an inflating dollar. But it didn't turn out that way. Inflation disastrously skewed and disori-ented companies' accounting, confusing real profits with mirages created by an unstable currency. Most of the government's early attempts to fight inflation. beginning with President Nixon's disastrous price controls, were bad for industrial performance. By the summer of 1982, when the current boom began, the Dow Jones Industrial Average was less than one-third its 1968 value. The boom started at a point at which inflation was coming down, rapidly and convincingly, and the chief threat to e boom now is the evidence that inflation beginning to accelerate again.

This boom is said to have generated $2.2 trillion in new wealth for stockholders. It thusiastically buying American stocks. The attractions of the U.S. economy still appar-opment. Individuals can get rich by financial manipulation, but that is not how large countries raise their standards of living.

What is to be made of this sorry record, unbroken except when Henry Kissinger held both jobs in Richard Nixon's waning months, and then, as President Gerald Ford's secretary of state, worked in rare and impressive harmony with Brent Scoweroft, his former deputy at the National Security Council? Mr. Scowcroft, the model NSC assistant of recent years, carried out his duties with restraint, strength and honesty, and helped make the system work. We can be excused for concluding that friction between the Department of State and the NSC is inherent in their overlapping mandates and dif-fering relationships to both the president and Congress. The secretary of state, confirmed by the Senate, oversees a vast global bureaucracy that deals with every thing from crises to visus. The assistant to the president for national security affairs - to use the actual title - runs a small informal staff in the very shadow of the Oval Office, concentrating only on matters that directly interest or affect the president. Technically, the title does not contain the pseudo-academic word "adviser." The semantic difference reflects part of the problem. The dilemma has been debated and studied for a generation, almost always with the same general conclusions. But the problem not only has not zone away, it has gotten worse.

Every administration begins with high-sounding rhetoric about the primacy of the secretary of state and orderly procedures, but as the president and his staff grow impatient with what they often view as the State Department's leisurely, domestically insensitive, bureaucratic approach to policy, the White House starts to get involved. At first, it tries to get results through second-guessing and prod-ding the department, then, sometimes. it takes matters into its own hands.

The core of the problem ies not in the actions of those appointed to these criti-cal jobs but in the leadership of the man who chooses and must direct them.

mance was a carefully crafted one-night stand in the Oval Office that cannot be safely repeated outside the protective shield of a television studio. As Mr. Reagan began a long vacation in California that few would begrudge him, he left behind a sheltered presidency in which isolation is approaching an art form. He has given so many contradictory explanations to unresolved issues in the Iran-contra affair that he dares not comment further without a script. When he is dispatched to the White House briefing room to announce a new appointment or proclaim an old policy, his handlers warn him against answering even friendly questions.

This is sad, for Mr. Reagan and the United States. On his best of days at the height of his popularity, Mr. Rea-gan was a high-risk performer in the briefing room who rarely allowed a fact to get in the way of a stray thought. But part of his considerable charm was that he usually stood his ground with the media and said what .. was on his mind. Those days are gone, probably forever.

Modern U.S. presidents are often hidden for a few months when poli-cies go sour, but Mr. Reagan is now. breaking even his own records for prolonged inaccessibility. Ironically, the isolation has become endemic under the reign of a new White House team supposedly dedicated to open-ness, instead of the secret and devious behavior characteristic of aides during the Iran-contra affair. The White House chief of staff, Howard Baker, and the national security adviser, Frank Carlucci, are ways of Washington. When they took over from Donald Regan and Admiral John Poindexter, it was widely expected that Mr. Reagan would be released to resume normal communications. This has not happened. Instead, he is now more isolated and inaccessible than at any previous time in his political career. He averaged a news conference every two months under Mr. Regan; under Mr. Baker, the average is one in three months, and is likely to get worse. The White House and The White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, treats even the mention of a news conference as a joke. News conferences are not, of course, the only measurement of ac-cessibility. By other yardsticks, Mr. Reagan is even more isolated now than he used to be. For instance, he once repeatedly gave interviews; now he gives none, except for occasional chats with journalistic boosters. Other presidents unwilling to face the media have sometimes used panels of citizens to ask them questions. Even this dubious device can't be safely used by Mr.

Reagan in his present state of mind.
On July 27, campaigning in Port Washington, Wisconsin, for his "economic bill of rights," he wandered

Don't Cut Off Romanians

Regarding "It's Time to Reign in Ceausescu (June 10) by Jeri Laker: It is time for those in the U.S. Congress who voted in favor of suspending Romania's most-favorednation trading status to imagine what that country would be like without it. and without the workings of the Jackson-Vanie amendment, which specifically links trade to emigration. A suspension could very well compound the oppression of religion and ethnic minorities in Romania. The blenk state of that country's economy. and the shortages of necessities suffered by as people, have been well depicted. But through the extension of most-favored-nation status and the workings of the freedom of emigration amendment of the 1974 Trade Reform Act, a relief valve is in place that has provided for the movement and resettlement of thousands of Romanian families. Though this is an imperfect solution, it has provided some hope. It likely was the Jackson-Varue amendment that led Romania to help in the emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel - a point that many in Congress seem to have ignored. The Romunical government has responded favorably to specific Western concerns about human rights, allowing release and emigration in several difficult cases. It is highly probable that any additional stress placed on the government through the loss of most-favored-nation status will be passed on to the populace through even greater deprivation and controls. The churches there are overflowing with people seeking solare; the churches are subsidized by the state and could he subject to much greater restrictions. The human rights situation in Romania is complex and will not be solved by tampening with most-fa-vored nation status. What is needed from those concerned with human rights there is the same type of creative thinking that brought Jackson-Vanic into being in the first place. and not the negation of what limited resources are at America's disposal. # South Korea Protesters Decry Pace Of Reforms

The Associated Press

SEOUL -About 3,000 students and other activists calling for democracy demonstrated Friday at a university campus in Seoul as hundreds of thousands of workers around the country went on strike.

The four-hour demonstration at Scoul National University was largely peaceful. About 2,000 police were stationed outside the school gate but did not intervene. No clashes were reported.

The protesters raised clenched fists and shouted, "Down with military dictatorship" as speakers urged the government to release all political prisoners.

The crowds also voiced support for the striking workers, who are seeking more pay and freer unions. Some speakers denounced the current democratic initiatives by the government as "a temporary shift in tactics" and called for further struggle to assure democracy. The Labor Ministry said more than 200 strikes continued throughout the country.

The strikes began soon after the government agreed last month to sweeping democratic reforms, in-cluding direct presidential elections and fewer restrictions on labor unions. The government agreed to the reforms after weeks of antiwernment demonstrations, mostly led by university students.

Authoritarian governments have kept a tight rein on unions since South Korea's economic surge began in the 1970s. Strikes have been virtually banned. Pay has been kept low to make the country's products cheaper on world markets.

South Korean employees worked a 54.4-hour work week last year, but earned an average of only $370 a month. Productivity has nearly doubled since 1980, but pay has risen only 40 percent.

By Jack Iams Shortly after he left the Herald, novelist Elliot Paul - who had been one of the staff's brightest ornaments in the lane 1920s and early 30s — said casually to me one day, "If I have as good a time in the next war as I had in the last one, I'll have no complaints."

It was a time when

World War I seemed well behind us, and no one yet was worrying much about another. I didn't know Elliot very well at the time, and I was shocked. His remark sounded cynical and callous. Later, I was to realize that he was one of the most compassionate and peace-loving men in the world, but at the time, when I was a young and wide-eyed member of the Herald staff, I wasn't used to hearing people take it for granted that another world war was on its way.

Now, in retrospect, I can see that Elliot was simply more prescient than most of the people I knew and worked with. He had read the writing on the wall and he knew what it meant. Very lew, if any, of us on were up to. Although Mussolini was even then preparing for his Abyssinian adventure, he was looked upon, around the Herald anyway, as something of a comicopera figure

And indeed there were a good many Americans in those days, some of them quite respectable, who frankly admired Il Duce for having made the trains run on time. As for Hitler, the silly little man with the Chaplinesque moustache then seemed more of a mountebank than a monster.

Ironically, I think that most of us on the Herald thought that the most dangerous threat to peace was inside France itself, with the country showing increasing signs of coming close to civil

The Herald itself, of course, steered carefully clear of any comment on the French situation - that had long been its policy - and I would imagine now that a stranger reading an average issue would have had little or no inkling that France, and the rest of the Western World, was heading for seri-undercurrents, had never looked lovelier. Wine and food had never easted better, and though we weren't ex-actly overpaid, we could afford a few pleasures. Perhaps we were living in a cellophane-wrapped world, too absorbed in our own enjoyment of it to bother with what was brewing outside. Still, some of us must have known. Bill Shirer, for instance. Bill was as clear-sighted an observer as anyone could ask for. Yet I would guess that even he, when he left the Herald larer that year and went to Berlin, had his eyes opened by what he saw there. Certainly his great "Berlin Diary" opened the eyes of countless Americans to the evil destinies that were taking shape in the mind of the silly little man with the moustache. But "Berlin Diary" was not published until 1941.

On the other hand, there were people like Sparrow Robertson, our sports columnist, who hadn't the faintest idea that anything could ever go wrong with the world of Harry's Bar and the Silver Ring that he and his Old realized that France had fallen and that the Germans had occupied Paris.

I would think of myself as somewhere between Shirer and the Sparrow. I must have been dirnly aware of great and ominous events taking shape not too far away in the world. And yet I wanted to believe, like Sparrow, that the wonderful Paris we lived in, the wonderful lives we led as Herald staffers, that these were the only realities and would go on forever. I suppose that's why I was so shaken when Elliot Paul referred so marrer-of-factly to "the next war."

Ellior was right, of course. The writing was indeed on the wall. And yet, in a sense, the Sparrow was also right. His world, as he saw it, was indestructible. It may not have seemed so, for a while, but it has survived and there it stands. Paris is as beautiful as ever, and the paper we all worked for and loved --well, most of the time, anyway - is also still there, reborn as the International Herald Tribune but as flourishing as ever in the grandeur of its 100th year.

Festival International de la Mer

Starring the Shores of Mauritius in Tribute to the Sea

International Ocean Festival

Captain Cook's voyages of discovery took him around the world and across the Indian Ocean to a coral-fringed island called Mauritius. Following in his wake, William Bligh, lieutenant in command of the Bounty, set sail for the South Seas in December 1787. Both events will feature in the two months of festivity due to begin in Port Louis, the island's capital, on the 4th of September. But the International Ocean Festival is a celebration of the present as much as the past. Its underlying theme — "the sea that unites us" — captures the confidence of an island in its Legends still speak of the boats that carried our ancestors across the sea. Since then. Mauritius has been visited and re-visited by ships from Asia, Africa and Europe. The island, which was discovered by the Portuguese in 1511, is steeped in history and draws its rich cultural inheritance from all four corners of the earth.

ROM September until November, over 2 dozen countries will help to make the International Ocean Festival an unforgenable event: They include Japan (24-27 September), Britain (28 September to 4 October), South Korea (3-6 October), Pakistan (3-7 October), Egypt (7-10 October), United States (12-18 October), Sovier Union (10-25 October), Australia (27 October to 5 No-of the island's existence, she assumed it was in the West Indies. Darwin was drawn to its shores in his quest for the origin of the species. Nicholas Pike, newly appointed consul, searched for details of the island in vain.

Over a century later, Mauritius is as intriguing as ever. Despite the services of a dozen international airlines it remains an unspoilt tropical paradisc, free from chaos and crowds -2 place where the nearest thing Afrer his arrival in 1868 the to an oilslick is an empty bottle of Ambre Solaire, and the only line across the beach is the horizon. Discerning travellers will already have added this destination to their itinerary. For, 2s Darwin learned, the secret of success is natural selection and as Ancrood Jugnauth, the island's Prime Minister, explains: "Selective rourism providing the very best for a first-class clientele attracts an adventurous and enlightened set of holi> day makers to our shores." It wasn't always like that. hapless Nicholas Pike wrote: "I returned to my dirty, uncomforrable hotel; and after passing a miserable night, rose at daylight weary and sick. What with bugs, mosquiroes and

If this is a specimen of a first class hotel in Mauritius, Heaven bless those obliged to put up with the second and third class."

His contemporary, Mark Twain, marvelled at the magnificence of his surroundings rather than the paucity of his lodgings. The secret of Manritius' appeal has always been its unspoilt natural beauty, but roday's visitors can rely on finding world class facilities as well.

National independence in 1968 marked the start of a new ers. The economy, which had relied almost entirely on the annual sugar cane crop, took on a fresh lease of life. Within a few years, four luxury hotels A mere speck in the ocean, cockroaches, the knocking had been built and their immether foreign investment. With the government's assistance and the growth of Mauritius' own national airline, selective tourism flourished. The statistics tell their own story. In 1968 there were only 15,000 visitors, by 1986 over ten times that number were expected. The industry has become the third largest in the island and now involves nearly 10 percent of the entire population.

Today the Mauritian Association of Hoteliers and Restaurateurs (AHRIM) includes 32 horels and 16 restaurants. From luxury borels such as the Trou aux Biches, La Pirogue or Le Touestrok to small seaside resorts such as the Villa Caroline and Etoile de Mer, they all reach international standards.

Professional horeliers claim that a luxury hotel should cater for no more than 400 guests. In Mauritius, with its limited edition of 2500 rooms, every visitor is a VIP.

Mauritius has always welcomed the traveller to its shores. Its cosmopolitan blend of Indian, Asian, Chinese, African and European influences has produced a race of people that are unique, unforgentable and a joy to know. Furthermore, over 90 percent of them are bilingual.

In the hotels and restaurants food is the order of the day. Close your eyes and you could be in a Rive Gauche café, the heart of Madras, Beijing or Port-au-Prince. As well as French, Indian, Chinese and Creole delicacies, there is an ecletic, island cuisine that draws on all four traditions. The local seafood is excellent and most menus also offer venison, hare and wild boar as well as fresh tropical fruit.

Nearly all the beach horels provide amenities for rennis, golf, swimming, water-skiing, sailing, snorkeling and fishing. Divers can explore the rich variety of life in the water round the island; deep sea fishermen can enjoy the chase for blue and black marlin, wahoo, shark or tuna. Each evening the enterrainment continues with live music, discotheques, a dance show or turn in the casino. Ourside, there is always the quier of the night and a sky full of stars to dream by. During the International Ocean Festival, this exclusive stretch of the Indian Ocean is certain to be lovelier, livelier, more welcoming than ever. But for those who have already experienced her magic and her mystery, she remains as constant and unchanging as the sea.

Dow Again Flirts With 2,700

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange ended slightly lower Friday in active trading, with profit-taking blamed for the market's inability to push the Dow Jones industrial average to a close above 2,700. The Dow, which pierced 2,700 for the second time in as many days, fell 6.06 points from Thursday's record to close at 2,685,43. For the week, however, the Dow jumped 93.43 points. It cracked the 2,600 level for the first time Monday.

Declines outnumbered advances by a 17-15 ratio. Volume was about 196.12 million shares, down from 217.1 million Thursday. The activity Friday "is an example of the kind of market we've had," said Hugh Johnson, head of the investment policy committee at First Albany Corp. "It was given a real knockout punch in the form of the trade data, but this fighter got up from the canvas and was ready to go again."

Mr. Johnson was referring to the Commerce Department report Friday showing the U.S. merchandise trade deficit widened to $15.7 billion in June from a revised $14.04 billion shortfall in May. "This is clear evidence of the market's underlying strength." Mr. Johnson said, referring to the NYSE. "I think you would have to call today very impressive. When you have had such a runup you must expect some profit-taking. "The trade data was a good excuse to get this market really nailed, but it handled some pretty negative, tough stuff," he said.

Mr. Johnson said that the market was the beneficiary of a "significant pool of liquidity that exist on a worldwide basis. Foreign investors are buying stocks and bonds without fear of losing their shirts when they convert back to their own currencies.

Ralph Acampora, director of technical re-search at Kidder, Peabody & Co., said, "The market opened a little weak this morning, which is normal in light of the past few days. The bluechip leadership may be a little tired."

But he added, "Any pause will be just that, a near-term pull-back that will translate into a buying opportunity. liagara Mohawk was the most active NYSElisted issue, down % to 1514.

U.S. Corporate Wisdom: If You Can't Beat 'em, Quit

By LESTER C. THUROW

Los Angeles Times Service OS ANGELES — Every country has a comparative advantage — the thing it does best. The problem is to figure out where one's comparative advantage lies. So among all the things that America does, what does it do best? The answer is very simple. What American companies do best is go out of business. No one in the world goes out of business faster, with less cost, or with less regret than U.S. companies.

Recently I was talking with some consultants in a strategic planning firm about situations in which Japanese, European and American companies find themselves in an industry with excess capacity. The planners said that they always tell their American clients to go out of business. The Japanese mind-set, how-ever, is against abandoning an industry: Japanese companies are willing to listen only to strategies for conquering an industry. In the game of economics, the Japanese know only how to play offense.

The Europeans also are un-wrecking a company pays better than interested in strategies for going out of business. They rebuilding one. mind their consultants that their government regulations require them to hold on to their employees so long and make it so difficult to fire anyone or to close down a facility that it is simply too expensive to go out of

No matter how much money they are losing in the industry, they would lose more if they left it. They are interested in advice only about holding onto existing market share. If necessary, the Europeans are willing to play defense forever in economics.

Given this reality — the Japanese won't leave, the Europeans can't leave — the consulting firm reports its intelligence to its U.S. clients and recommends that they promptly abandon the industry. With offensive and defensive positions already taken, there is no room for American players. Usually this advice is taken without grumbling.

If you wished to design an economy that specialized in going out of business, you could not have designed a better one than the U.S. economy. America is the only country in the world where labor is genuinely a variable cost. Workers can be fired instantly with no severance pay. In fact, no large payments have to be made to labor if you want to get out of a business.

N the capital side, demands for high rates of return on investment mean that U.S. companies fall below their capital hurdle rates before foreign companies do. In other words, Americans will quit investing in new facilities while the Europeans and Japanese still are investing. This leaves Americans with older, more fully depreciated capital equipment. The result is fewer unrecovered capital costs when one abandons a production facility. The capital costs of leaving an industry are usually much lower for Americans.

Mergers, leveraged buyouts and hostile takeovers mean there is a ready market for getting out of business. Industrial fire sales are common and the necessary markets are well-developed.

In fact, if Americans do not get out of a business on their own, they are likely to be taken over by those who specialize in throwing companies out of businesses. If the takeover artists throw your company out of a business before you do, however, they are apt to throw you out with the business. "Get out before you are thrown out" might be the motto of American man In the United States, to go out of business is not the end of the line in one's career as it usually is abroad. A bright new future dawns. Using hostile takeovers, you can always imagine going into exciting new businesses. Even better, you can become a hostile takeover specialist with no intention of ever running

U.K. Firm May Bid For Stores

Mountleigh Aims At Conran Chain

The Associated Press

LONDON - Mountleigh Group PLC, a property company, said Friday that it was considering bidding for Storehouse PLC, Sir Terence Conran's retail chain, which has been at the center of takeover speculation. Storehouse replied that "any offer would be unwelcome, opportu-nistic and wholly lacking in com-mercial logic."

It said it had not received a for-mal approach from Mountleigh and asked Mountleigh to clarify its intentions. Mountleigh said its plans were at "a very early stage."

Mountleigh's financial adviser, Phillips & Drew, said the company was interested in buying Storehouse to sell off its pieces for a Storehouse operates about 900 stores in the United States and Europe that sell stylish furniture, houseware and clothes. The stores operate under the names of British Home Stores, Habitat, Mothercare and Conran's.

Mountleigh said it was pressured into making an announcement pre-maturely by the British Takeover Panel, which said that all interested parties had to declare their bid in-

"We feel a little hard done by being forced to be so candid," said James Hyslop, director of corporate finance at Phillips & Drew. A bid for Storehouse has been expected after reports last month that competing British retailers had each acquired stakes of less than 5 percent in the company. Market sources said at the time that the potential bidders included Woolworth Holdings PLC, Sears PLC and Burton Group PLC. In a statement on Friday, Store-house said, "The board will re-

Continental in Search of a Strategy

New Chairman Faces Tough Job to Turn Bank Around

By Robert A. Bennett New York Times Service CHICAGO — Thomas C. Theobald has a big job ahead of

In taking over as chairman and chief executive of Continental Illinois Corp., the former Citicorp vice chairman will be heading an organization that re-mains crippled three years after the U.S. government rescued it from the brink of collapse. This presents Mr. Theobald with the opportunity at Continental to create a turnaround similar to the one achieved by Alfred Brittain 3d at Bankers Trust Co. Bankers Trust was financially shaken in the mid-1970s yet today is one of the strongest and most profitable banks in the United States. Some in the industry believe that Mr. Theobald may use a strategy similar to Mr. Brittain's, narrowing Continental's focus and turning it into the equivalent of a merchant bank, which combines the activities of a commercial and investment bank. In July 1984, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. poured $5 billion into the bank when it nearly failed, largely because of huge problem loans to the energy

Three years later, the bank's earnings remain anemic. Had it not been for a slew of nonrecurring factors, it would have re-ported a loss in 1986.

Meanwhile, Continental has shrunk dramatically, from a peak of $47 billion in assets in 1981 to $33.4 billion currently. From the sixth-largest U.S. bank holding company in 1981, Conti-nental has fallen to 14th.

National Bank & Trust Co. Mr. Wooden said it could be hoped that Mr. Theobald's appointment in July and Mr. Ogden's resignation will mean "that era has come to an end."

Mr. Theobald has declined to be interviewed since his appointment was announced July 27. And he has said little about his plans, except to tell Continental's employees that his first pri-ority is to design a strategy and that he intends to move quickly. Some analysts believe Mr. Theobald will try to keep Continental somewhat balanced, building a base of consumer deposits, serving middle-size com-panies in the Middle West and strengthening the bank's investment banking capabilities. Others, however, predict he will take a more radical course along the lines of the strategy Mr. Brittain fashioned at Bankers Trust, focusing almost exclusively on providing sophisticated services for major corporations and governments around the globe. He would strip the bank of activities that fail to fit snugly into that strategy. He would, for example, get rid of Continental's small consumer-banking business and deal only with those medium-size companies that could make use of the bank's investment banking services.

Such an approach would draw on the primary strengths of both Mr. Theobald and Continental. Despite its problems of recent years, Continental still does business with 40 percent of the largest U.S. companies, accordis now chairman of the executive committee, and William S. Oging to its annual report. And Mr. Theobald spent almost his entire den, who resigned in mid-July as chairman of Continental Illinois 27-year career at Citicorp dealing with big companies.

In this way, Mr. Theobald would be turning what has been a negative factor into a positive See BANK, Page 13

"The NSA should be commended for having

Dollar Lower On Wider U.S. Trade Deficit

NEW YORK - The dollar closed lower Friday in sometimes hectic trading in response to an unexpected widening in the U.S. merchandise trade deficit in June, dealers said.

After tumbling as much as two pfennigs and two yen in early activity, however, the dollar pared its losses as participants scooped up "cheap dollars" on bargain hunting and technical-related buying, dealers said. The trade figures also caused prices on the New York Stock Exchange to fall at the opening, but the market recovered somewhat after the government released positive figures on wholesale prices, industrial production and business

The dollar traded as low as 1.8675 Deutsche marks, but recovered to close at 1.8785, still down more than a pfennig from 1.8893 on Thursday.
It was a similar story against the yen. The dollar traded down to 149.40 yen, before closing at 150.10, nearly 1.5 yen lower than

Thursday's closing of 151.525. The dollar also closed at 6.2765 French francs, down from 6.3095, and at 1.5610 Swiss francs, down

The widening in the June trade deficit to $15.71 billion from were "flabbergasted" by the broadening of the trade figure.

They said that early trading was chaotic, with participants unload-ing dollar positions that had been at taken on expectations of a trade improvement

Consequently, the larger-than-expected rise in July in U.S. industrial output had little impact on the dollar, dealers said. Nor did the slim rise in producer

The National Security Agency's interest in supercomputing is not new. It bought the first machines to emerge from the computer industry that Eniac. an Army project, helped to spawn in the 1940s. Today the NSA still typically

No one expects that practice to stop. But the NSA's move to develop its own specialty machines is seen by many people as a public acknowledgement of a long-devel-oping schism between the agency and the industry that supplies it. The source of that schism is primarily the changing economics of the computer business. When the intelligence agencies and national laboratories were virtually the only customers for supercomputers. they enjoyed tremendous influence over the pace of innovation.

Now, however, the market has broadened to encompass oil com-panies and auto manufacturers. airplane builders and weather agencies. While they, too, are interested in greater speed, they also want to make sure that new machines are not so revolutionary that Inc. for 290.9 million Canadian they require millions of dollars in "What we saw," Mr. Schneck man, the NSA's chief scientist. research into parallel processing. the technology that NSA officials believe has the best chance of meeting their needs.

Parallel processing, as a way to increase computing speed, consti-tutes a radical departure from traditional approaches. Most supercomputers, such as Cray's, perform calculations chiefly by brute force, grouping similar types of calculations and running them through a single, very fast processor. Parallel-processing machines divide a prob-lem into hundreds or thousands of pieces and assign each piece to a single processor — usually a microprocessor similar to those used in personal computers. These hundreds or thousands of processors work on their pieces simultaneously; the results are then combined.

Such computers are still in their infancy because they pose many unsolved design and programming challenges. Some early models have proven enormously fast at solving problems in fluid dynamics (such as tracking the flow of air over a wing) and pattern recognition (such as picking out camouflaged tanks in a leafy forest).

perform a single task at optimal For that reason, major computer makers have treated parallel ma-chines coolly. The fact is that there is a limited market for these machines," said a former executive of IBM's Federal Systems Division who asked not to be identified. The National Security Agency is rumored to be pumping more than $20 million a year into its super-computer research center — far more than the budgets of most of the 80 start-up companies working in the parallel-processing field. But on the surface, at least, the center resembles an entrepreneurial startup, with researchers wandering the halls in T-shirts and cut-off jeans.

There are differences, however. Every researcher has a top secret clearance, and the lengthy clearance process has delayed hiring and discouraged many from applying. Everyone also has access to remarkable resources. Downstairs, in a computer room sheathed in metal to frustrate eavesdroppers, researchers use a Cray II supercomputer and small parallel-processors made by Convex Computer, Intel and Multiflow.

So far the center has focused its cally designed, or "hard wired." to retical framework that will be used to solve problems using parallel processors. Another is developing operating systems and languages for programming the machines. A third group is writing applications programs for NSA projects, such as software to sift huge data bases or separate intercepted radio signals from background noise.

A fourth group, whose efforts will take up 30 or 40 percent of the research center's efforts, will actually build prototype computers.

We'll know we've succeeded it" computer users in the Defense Department and intelligence agencies "are clamoring to use our proto-types," Mr. Schneck said. Still, there are some who ques-

Pressure Grous For Realignment Of EMS Rates

FRANKFURT - The European Monetary System's joint currency float is showing renewed signs of tension that could lead to a major realignment within the next few months, analysts said Friday.

Most analysts expect an adjustment after the meeting of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank meeting said that a realignment could come sooner if the dollar's sharp decline continues, inflating the Deutsche mark against other EMS currencies.

The dollar plunged Friday against the mark after the reease of poor U.S. trade data. Until Friday, the pressure for realignment had been coming from weakness in minor curren cies in the eight-nation currency system, such as the Danish kro-ne and Belgian franc.

When they do borrow from banks, it is at extremely low interest rates, only a touch higher than the rates Continental itself pays for funds. This sort of lending constitutes a big part of Continental's business, which means its cost structure must be far lower than that of most other banks to make a comparable profit.

And Continental's top officers concede that the bank has not shrunk its staff and overhead in line with smaller assets. "We still have a long way to go," a senior officer said.

Mr. Swearingen said in an interview that costs remain high partly because of legal expenses from the 1984 collapse, which led to huge lawsuits against the bank. He said that, to improve the bank's overall management, a new credit-analysis and monitoring system had to be reported in net income. In the first half of this year, earnings were skewed by Continental's decision, like that of most other major banks, to set aside a big reserve for possible losses on loans to Third World countries. At Continental, the reserve amounted to $500 million. Excluding that, its first-half net income would have been $66.2 million, down sharply from the $79.8 million reported in the first half of 1986.

On the plus side, thanks to the FDIC's infusion of funds, Continental has a fairly strong capital base that will give Mr. Theobald flexibility in any possible restruc-turing. Stockholders' equity stood at $1.57 billion at the end of the second quarter, or 4.69 percent of total assets, well above the 3.75 percent average at the 15 largest U.S. bank holding companies.

Some analysts say that the pieces exist for a comeback but that progress had been retarded by the rift between Mr. Swearingen and Mr. Ogden.

"Everyone was taking sides, there was no corporate pride," said Joan Goodman, the analyst at Pershing & Co. "If Tom Theobald could bring a team spirit to Continental, he'll have it in the bag."

$36.84 billion, from $34.82 billion Exports, also increased, but more modestly — to $21.13 billion from $20.78 billion in May. "The delicit is very large and very disappointing," said Robert Ortner, undersecretary of commerce for economic affairs. Although the lowest forecast for the June deficit had been $12 bilhon, most estimates had been between $13 billion and $13.5 billion.

Friday's trade report is likely to undermine the Reagan administration's effort to convince Congress that the U.S. trade deficit is improving under the pressure of a weaker dollar. The administration wants to soften provisions of trade legisla-tion that is before a House-Senate conference committee. It contends the legislation would restrain trade and invite retaliatory steps from vading partners.

WAR GAMES: The Secret World of the

Creators, Players, and Policy Makers

33 Intersecting vaults' edge

Reviewed By Paul Bracken

THE nuclear war game — a simulated super-L power conflict in which high-level players test war plans by means of computer analyses - is a part of the lore of the atomic age. Along with Dr. Strangelove and the "black bag" of war codes that accompanies the president, war games are the subject of fascination among people who concern themselves with the problems of national security and danger.

Public interest in the subject is different from that of the insider professionals who design these games. if Thomas B. Allen's book "War Games" is a fair description of the war-gaming industry today, as I believe it is. Inside this secret world, process dominates subject matter, and there is greater interest in perfecting arcane methods than in nailing down conclusions about preferred policies. More fundamentally, there is a kind of relaxed everydayness attached to the business, and a view that it is indeed a business with marketing fads, competitive inlighting and nasty comments about the field as a whole. For insiders, war gaming develops a familiarity and routine that remind one more of managing a video store or cheese shop than of running a nuclear crisis.

Allen's book is an interesting account of war garning today, three decades after the excitement of the pioneering work in the 1950s has worn off. Back then the problems were new, because nuclear weapons were new. People apparently thought nuclear war was something of a possibility. No longer, as Allen lets us know, Current sophisticated thinking discounts the likelihood of the big war, and one of the problems in war gaming today is to get the game to go nuclear. Allen asserts that Pentagon games have to be rigged to get a nuclear escalation, and that one advantage of replacing human beings with role-playing computer programs is that escalation becomes much easier.

The strength of "War Games" lies in its insights, like the difficulty of getting human players on either the Soviet or American sides to initiate nuclear war. Games capture insights and experiences that are not written down anywhere else, so books such as this become important vehicles for communicating within the large defense establishment. In a European war the Soviets detonate a high-altitude nuclear explosion, the radiation from which knocks out NATO's radios and radar. NATO then must negoti-ate in the blind, or escalate without knowing what's really going on. Or consider the Soviet nerve gas attack in a different war also played in Europe:

"Very few of the base personnel had managed to get into their protective gear in time..." Both the command-and-control blackout problem and the inability of NATO forces to protect themselves from chemical attack are real concerns that might be ignored even more than they are were it not for the forced attention arising from their examination in war games.

"War Games" is full of anecdotes, comments, digressions and after-hours gaming stories that are the best part of the book. These after-hours tales often contain much more interesting material than do the official game reports written within the bureaucracy. They give an intuitive feel for how people face what at bottom are impossible decisions, and they are not restricted to committee review as are official reports. Official committee reviews often have to remove all material conclusions that might be offensive, and they are dominated by consideration of process and method rather, than subject.

Allen also does a good job of politely describing an all-too-common gaming phenomenon of the 1980s: the rigged game. Some games are designed views, the reward for which is often a consulting contract. Indeed, within the gaming industry there are some large annual simulations whose outcomes are so tightly controlled by their sponsors that they are widely viewed as advertising campaigns.

Thomas Allen's "War Games" may strike some as a bit disorganized, without an overarching theme connecting the scores of games and research centers that he describes. However, this is actually a feature of the gaming field in the 1980s, and is something the author cannot be faulted for. His book should be seen as an interesting update on a fascinating and important subject.

Paul Bracken, professor of public policy at Yale University, is the author of "The Command and Control of Nuclear Forces," He wrote this review for Steinbrenner refused to address the conditions under which he might dismiss Piniella, but if the team slips too far back — perhaps by as few as four games — the owner would probably move swiftly toward a change.

Finicila and the Yankees re-faced home early Thursday from a trip in which they lost eight of 10 games and fell from first place to third in the American League East, two and a half games behind the Foronto Blue Jays. But of equal concern was the status of Piniella, who upset Steinbrenner during the

Lewis: A Hit Single, but No World Record

INDIANAPOLIS - He was going to be as big as Michael Jackson, according to his manager, but the boos in the Coliseum on that gold-medal night in 1984 squashed that goal faster than you could say "Victory Tour." To be sure, Carl Lewis sold 500,000 copies of his single record, "Break It Up," in Europe this year, but to most Americans he is merely the last two words of the question, "What ever

Only those persistent souls who follow the bouncing decimal points of track and field know that Carl Lowis is still just about as big as Carl Lewis, which is no small matter.

He materialized Thursday in Indianapolis in a slightly fluffy cream-colored long-sleeved shirt, khaki pants and a wide leather belt with an animal's tooth hanging from the belt for decoration—a three-piece suit for Carl Lewis. He has not been going out of his way to give interviews since 1984, when much of the American press made a very big thing about his taking only two long jumps on the night he won his gold medal, and waving a flag that seemed to fly into his hands much too conveniently, and posing for copyrighted photographs with a gold medal in his hand before he won anything. "I think we've all matured," Lewis said

Thursday, "I know I went out to the Olympics to achieve gold medals and other people went to achieve stories. Everyone lives their lives. I don't feel anyone's out to get anyone."

Gold Medalists

Lewis, who will compete in the long jump and the 400-meter relay on Sunday afternoon, is 26 and has been a world-class competitor for nearly 10 years, with no end in sight. He is unbeaten in his last 50 long-jump competitions.

He talked Thursday about competing a year or two beyond the Games in Seoul, South Korea, next year. Not too many sprinters and leapers manage to keep their hamstrings limber in three different decades.

With the help of some arthroscopic surgery on his knee last summer, Lewis has survived long enough to charm away some of the bad raps and talk about trying for the gold in the 1,600-meter relay in Seoul, too.

That would be on top of his long jump, 100and 200-meter sprints and 400-meter relay gold medals in 1984, tying him with Jesse Owens for the most golds by one track and field athlete. His first full album remains unmixed in the studio while Lewis prepares for Sunday and the world championships in Rome at the end of the month. All that is missing is a world record.

His best event is the long jump, which happens to have one of the most spectacular re-cords in all of sports, the 29 feet, 21/2 inches Bob Beamon jumped in the rarified air of Mexico

Lewis has jumped 28-104, and as far as he is concerned, he jumped 30 feet one day in India-napolis in 1982, but a judge insisted he had seen Lewis's toe extend past the foul line, even

He passed up four chances to go for the record that night in August 1984. He had the gold medal with his first jump of 28-14 and fouled on his second, so be pulled on his warmups and watched the others fall short, while he the last 11 games, including a seasaved himself for his fourth gold medal, in the son-ending three-game series at Ti200.

Fans who had paid as much as $50 to watch

"We've got seven games with Lewis jump for the footsteps of Bob Beamon them," Anderson said. "So either Fans who had paid as much as $50 to watch booed from the stands, costing Lewis considerable money and considerable reputation.

"People in the stands said they didn't get their money's worth, and I could understand that," Lewis said, "but I didn't take the extra umps because my legs were healthy."

His letdown in 1985 was understandable, and he injured his knee last year, but he said his attitude is better now, despite the death of his father this spring. An athlete and coach, Bill Lewis had been a rock for his three sons and one daughter.

"Since last November and December, most of the time I didn't even talk about it," he said. Carol has had a very difficult time recovering. I am using everything as an inspiration. But it has been difficult. It has been difficult."

He said his body and his psyche were fine as he prepared to give Beamon another challenge. And who knows? Given Carl Lewis's perseverance, the time is coming when Michael Jackson, wherever he is, just might daydream of being the next Carl Lewis.

Tigers Down Royals As Morris Finds Control of Pitches

KANSAS CITY, Missouri -The Kanses City Royals didn't have much of a chance to extend their four-game winning streak once Jack Morris found out he was in control of all of his pitches.

"I just felt like if I kept throwing good I would win," Morris said after he pitched a five-hitter and

"It's the first time in a long time that I've thrown all four of my pitches and had a pretty good idea of where they were going," he said.
"It was just a good night for me." Morris, who walked only one, retired 16 consecutive batters from the second to the seventh inning. He gave up a solo homer to Jim Eisenreich in the eighth, then retired the Royals in order in the ninth to pull the Tigers within a half-game of first place Toronto in the American League East.

"He'll win a lot the rest of this one of us is going to be ahead of the other a little here and there, and both will have a shot. No matter what happens here, it's going to come down to that."

Pat Sheridan, who had three hits, including an RBI triple, said the Tigers had focused recently on the New York Yankees, whom Detroit beat in three out of four games last weekend. Now that the Tigers have completed the season series with New York, the focus is changing to

"Everybody has been talking about the Yankees, but I've felt all along it could come down to that last week between us and Toronto." Sheridan said.

Wharton Sets 400-Meter Medley Mark

BRISBANE, Australia (Reuters) - Dave Wharton of the United States broke the world record in the 400-meter individual medley Friday at the Pan Pacific Swimming championships here. Wharton, 18, powered away from Alex Baumann of Canada and Rob Woodhouse of Australia, to clock 4 minutes, 16.12 seconds, bettering Baumann's mark of 4:17.41, set at the Los Angeles Olympics in 1984.

Wharton led from the gun and was just behind his target for Baumann's world mark as he entered the final freestyle leg. Woodhouse was second in 4:18.05, and Baumann third, in 4:18.46. Baumann, who swam over to congratulate Wharton, said later, "He's going to be the one to beat in '88."

Blind Sailor Weathers Storm at Sea

ST. GEORGE'S, Bermuda (UPI) - Jim Dickson, attempting to become the first blind sailor to cross the Atlantic, fought through storm and waves for a rendezvous with a pilot boat Friday on the way to Bermuda to repair vital equipment and rest from days in heavy seas. Don McGrath, a member of Dickson's support crew on Bermuda, said he was heading his 36-foot (11-meter) sloop. Eye Opener, through 8-foot waves stirred up by tropical storm Arlene to a meeting with government pilot boat about 28 miles (45 kilometers) from shore.

Dickson started up Eye Opener's engine at midnight Thursday about 58 miles northeast of the island to make the open-ocean meeting, McGrath said. He was expected to arrive in Bermuda by 4 P.M. McGrath said Dickson, 41, was in good spirits and eager to continue his attempt to cross the Atlantic alone.

The Soviet national baseball team played its first game Thursday and lost, 22-0, to a Nicaraguan team in the Ukrainian capital of Kiev, Tass news agency reported. Tass said the Soviets "at least managed to prevent the guests from scoring points in two innings."

A Sip of Breaky Bottom

New York Times Service

EWES. England - Thirteen years ago Peter Hall, 43, who owns the Breaky Bottom Vineyard here in southeast England, got tired of raising pigs and decided to plant a crop. Strawberries and raspberries were "too boring." he said. So he planted four acres of grapes.

Between 1978 and 1981, only one crop survived the cold English summers, and that yielded just 3.000 bottles of wine. The sun shone long and hard in 1983, giving Hall a bumper crop sufficient for 20,000 bottles. In 1985, the weather turned chilly again and the vines refused to flower. "We got just 1.177 bottles," he said with a sigh.

Last year, however, he was up to 8,000 bottles, and this spring he optimistically planted two more acres (.8 hectares).

"My mother's family comes from Burgundy, and I've always loved the idea of growing grapes he said, uncorking a bottle of Breaky Bottom 1983 in his farmhouse kitchen. "I think difficult things are worth doing, and this is one of them."

During the last two decades. Britain has joined the ranks of the world's wine producers, with more than 300 vineyards, all in the south of England and in Wales. Of these. 134 make their own wine.

"The problem is they have to use precocious grapes because of the weather," said Hugh Johnson, author of "The World Atlas of Wine." But growers here are extremely dedicated, and the wines have improved tremendously in the last five or six years."

With just 172,000 gailons (about 650,000 liters) of wine a year. Britain is not about to challenge the great wine-making regions of France. Yet annual production is now sufficient for this country to be officially recognized as a winemaking nation by the European Community. A few vineyards even export, mainly to West Germany. Singapore and Japan. "In terms of area, English vineyards have multiplied tenfold in 20 years," said Geoffrey Bond, of the English Vineyards Association. "And there is every sign that they will double in the next 10."

Müller-Thurgau 1986, a slightly more robust white wine. Together with Reichensteiner, these are the most popular English wines.

Almost all English wines are white. Of those, the most popular grape varieties are German (though critics insist that growing condi-tions have imparted a distinct English flavor). The latitude is the same as the great German wine regions, and the medium-sweet German taste appealed to many of Britain's pioneer grape growers.

Hall's experiences with grape strains seem fairly typical of most small growers here. He began by planting almost all Müller-Thurgau, because of its proven success in England Hall's Müller-Thurgaus failed to flower. But his tiny crop of seyval-blanc, a French and American hybrid popular in up-state New York, produced abundant fruit after just two years. In 1983 he replaced must of his Müller-Thurgau vines with seyval-blanc. He also keeps a token row of pinot noir as a salute to his French ancestors. "But we could never make red wine here. The sun isn't strong enough, and it's just too

ASIDE from the weather, many believe England to be nicely suited to viticulture. The soil is good; even the chalk found here in Sussex is considered a plus. The cool winters are ideal for the vines' dormant

The Romans apparently recog-nized this early on. They brought grapevines here in the third century A.D. The wine-making tradition died out around the 16th century. when it proved easier to import fine wines from the Continent. In the years after World War II, however, interest grew, sparked by the Hambledon Vineyards of Sir Guy Salisbury-lones in Petersfield. Hampshire, considered by many to be the modern patriarch of English

Because the industry is new and precarious. English wines tend to be rather expensive, costlier than comparable German wines. Most small wine makers, like Hall, sell from their homes, Fortnum & Mason, the London department store, and several London wine bars carry Breaky Bottom. The rest of his stock is sold to friends and longtime customers.

NEW YORK - Hoping to participate in a historic turning of the tide in human affairs - or at least in an unusual communal experience - people across the United States, as well as as in some other countries are planning to watch the sunrise Sunday from sites of great scenic beauty or religious significance.

Chief architect of the gatherings is Jose Arguelles, of Boulder. Colorado. Citing Mayan and Aztec calendars, he says that Sunday marks the start of a quarter-century in which the Earth may shake itself asunder unless enough of its inhabitants marshal their collective spiritual will or "harmonic convergence" to neutralize the

The Earth, he says, is seized with a "fever" induced by the arms race and other effects of modern science and technology. He urges a reversion to the Mayan views of the cosmos and of nature, which he believes were far closer to the truth than those of modern science.

Michael Coe. a professor of anthropology at Yale and a specialist in Mayan culture, dismissed Arguelles's predictions as totally crackpot.

"Pity the poor Mayans," he said, For more than 100 years, he said, "cultists have been deriving all sorts of predictions and occult meanings from their legends."

But many people are expected to act on Arguelles's predictions, set forth in his book "The Mayan Factor — Path Beyond Technology" and widely publicized in astrological magazines. Gatherings are expected at sites that are scenic or revered. Among them are Mount Shasta in California, sacred to local Indian tribes: Niagara Falls: Grand Canyon: Chaco Canyon. New Mexico; and Teotihuacan, the ancient city dominated by pyramids near Mexico City.

In a recent telephone interview. Arguelles said that he knew of plans for observances in many other parts of the world, including a dozen in Australia, netably at Ayer's Rock, which is revered by scholars agree that, according to Mayan legend, each previous Baktun has terminated in some form of universal disaster. According to Aztec tradition. Edward Cainek. of the University of Rochester, a leading authority on the Aztec calendar, the world is now living in the Age of the Fifth Sun.

the four previous ages having ended in some catastrophe.

One was terminated by a rain of fire, another by a great flood. One was destroyed by a great wind, and another era says, the return of Quetzalcoatl may be ended when jaguars devoured everyone. The Age of the Fifth Sun was inaugurated in the Aztec year 13-Reed, or A.D. 1011, when the god-like figure Quetzalcoatl founded Teotihuacan. According to Calnek, the Azrees believed that the Age of the Fifth Sun would end in great movements of the Earth, or earthquakes.

Arguelles, an art historian trained at the spirit through a single collective human University of Chicago, bases his theories in part on the Aztec belief that their history ran in 52-year cycles. If the world was to come to an end, the Aztecs said, it would do so at the end of such a cycle. And if Quetzalcoatl returned, as they expected, he the arms race and insults to the environ-
